

2016 Annual Report
Professor André Singer
President, Royal Anthropological Institute

The cornerstone of our year was the conference Anthropology, Weather and Climate Change, which took place 27th-29th May. Organized jointly with the Department of African, Oceania and Americas of the British Museum, and additionally with the kind facilitation of the Anthropology Department of University College London, it aimed at exploring ways that we as anthropologists may make a contribution to this vital debate. We were particularly keen not just to share insights from recent fieldwork but also to welcome those who have worked in non-anthropological contexts on these issues. In the event, we heard a fascinating opening speech from Lord Deben, the Chair of the UK Independent Committee on Climate Change, and former Minister for the Environment, and equally from Mr Chruszczow, Chair of the Subsidiary Body for Implementation of the United Nations Framework on Climate Change.

This auspicious beginning was followed by more than fifty panels and events which looked at climate change from a variety of points of view. Amongst the highlights were a plenary from our colleagues in the American Anthropological Association, discussing their report on climate change, and a showing of the film Moana Rua: the Rising of the Sea which brought home graphically the extent of the challenge facing us. We are indebted to our colleague and Fellow Professor Hviding (Bergen) for so kindly arranging this, and introducing us to its Director, Professor Heneriko. The Wenner-Gren Foundation very generously sponsored us once more, enabling us to meet colleagues from around the world, who otherwise would not have been able to be with us.

The challenge as always with large conferences is to turn the excitement and creative energy of our time together into something that will result in a lasting contribution. To this end, the RAI Environmental Committee is working on a printed volume of the proceedings, and additionally on a web-site resource that may be continuously updated, and which is aimed to provide a vade mecum for anthropologists as we continue to negotiate this pressing issue.

In November, we were greatly honoured to welcome colleagues from Austria, for a further installment in our occasional 'Country Day' series. The Austrian delegation was headed by Professor Andre Gingrich, and over the course of a day they gave us a remarkable over view of the way that anthropology is has developed and is practiced in today's Austria. These days contribute greatly to the international profile of the institute. We do intend to publish the proceedings regularly - the first it will be recalled was on France, and is out. The manuscript on the second, Poland edited by Professor Buchowski, is now received and we hope to be able to celebrate its appearance next year.

A great day in our calendar is always the Huxley lecture, which this year was delivered by Professor Margaret Lock. Entitled "Mutable Environments and Permeable Human Bodies", it gave an engrossing account of the way that our changing understanding of epigenetics means that we can reconsider the way that the environment may also influence the genome.

Throughout the year, our busy film programme continued, with showings at the Doc House in London, as well as regular seminars at the RAI. Reviewer meets Reviewed, our monthly seminars where we bring together authors and reviewers to discuss the book in question continued at the Anthropology Library at the British Museum. These are often very significant academic events in their own right, offering a unique insight into the way that authors approach their work, and the thinking processes that give rise to them.

Our co-operation with other institutions continues. At Westminster University, where I am visiting Professor, we were pleased to be able to share an event marking my second Presidential Address with the launch of my latest film Where the Wind Blew, which looks at the environmental impact of nuclear testing during the cold war.

Finally, just before Christmas we held the next installment of the RAI 'History Days'. On this occasion, we covered the period from 1918-1935, which of course coincides with the rise of university departments and very rapid changes in the shape of anthropology. Malinowski himself did not become President of the RAI, though he was invited by Council to do so, but he was always friendly and it will certainly be part of the history project to trace the evolving links between the RAI and the emergence of professional anthropology and anthropologists.

There is just one staff change I should mention, which is that our Film Officer, Susanne Hammacher, who took a sabbatical last year to work at the Übersee Museum in Bremen, decided to accept a permanent position there as Team Leader of Communication and Education. I should like to congratulate her on her promotion, and at the same time thank her for her many years of service to the institute as Film Festival Manager. As a film maker myself, I have been able closely to witness her very great contribution to the RAI, not just to the festival, but also to the film programme as a whole which she has built up to a key and lively part of the RAI's portfolio of activities. Susanne departs with our thanks, and best wishes for the future.

In closing my annual report, I should like to thank the all staff once more for their extra-ordinary facility in coordinating and leading the RAI. I have concentrated on the main events that have taken place at the institute, but we should not forget that our publications – particularly the JRAI and AT - continue to go from strength to strength and provide, after nearly two hundred years, a unique record of the changing circumstances of anthropology, both here and abroad. It is indeed a privilege to be President of the RAI.

Treasurer's Report

The RAI held a steady financial position in 2016, maintaining an overall surplus at the end of the year. Our equities investments continued to show signs of recovering, and the fund balance at the end of the year remained buoyant. We have received grants from the William Buller Fagg Trust, to whom we are indebted for their cordial additional support of the assistant archivist.

Our warnings from previous years remain. The instability of the financial world situation, and the more specific rise of 'open access' publishing means that the future income of the RAI may be affected. However, we have tried to mitigate against this by signing a new, extended contract with our publisher, Wiley. We have also continued our programme of diversification of activities and their related income, in order to reduce the reliance of the RAI on any single source of funds. These activities include our major conference series, the next one of which takes place in 2018, continuing to work with the Alexander Street Press, and seeking donation from fellows of any unwanted anthropology books, that may either go to our library, or if already there, disposed of for the benefit of the RAI.

The diversification of our investments so as to include property continues. We now have one house purchased on behalf of the Esperanza Trust, which is rented out, and another purchased partly with general funds and partly with Horniman Funds, which is also rented out.

Income from Fellowship and membership continues to remain steady, showing a slight increase in numbers overall. Provided that we can successfully diversify in the coming years, we can continue to be cautiously optimistic about our financial position.

Auditors' statement on the summary accounts to the trustees of the Royal Anthropological Institute

We have examined the summary accounts set out on pages 5 to 6 inclusive.

Respective responsibilities of trustees and auditors

These summary accounts presented on pages 5 to 6 are the responsibility of the trustees. It is our responsibility to report our opinion on their consistency with the full accounts, on which we reported on 15 July 2017. Our report on the full accounts of the Institute includes information on the responsibilities of the trustees and the auditors relating to the preparation and the audit of those accounts and on the basis of our unqualified opinion on those accounts.

Basis of opinion

We have carried out the procedures we consider necessary to ascertain whether the summary accounts are consistent with the full accounts from which they have been prepared.

Opinion

In our opinion the summary accounts on pages 5 to 6 are consistent with the full accounts of the Royal Anthropological Institute for the year ended 31 December 2016.
